

ANTHONY ZHOU/THE CAMPANILE
Eighth grader Felix Wang studies for the math validation test. This is a typical Sunday morning routine for Wang as he prepares for the exam. "I've heard the test is hard, so I have to study and be extra careful about those tricky probability problems," Wang said.

At the beginning of the semester, I did not have much experience in taking photos, and my first couple of photos were not very good. However, as the semester went on, I got better at taking photos and writing captions. The photo above was a lot better than my first because I was able to capture the person in the process of actually doing the thing that I was writing about. Though I have a long way to go, I believe that my photos have gotten a lot better over the semester.